in the heart of africa by sir samuel w baker is a detailed account of his expedition to discover the sources of the Nile river undertaken in 1861. Baker accompanied by his wife embarked on this challenging journey with the hope of meeting the East African expedition led by Captains Speke and Grant. The narrative begins with their departure from Cairo and their arduous crossing of the Nubian Desert where they faced extreme heat and the threat of the simoom. Baker describes the desolate landscapes and the geological features they encountered such as volcanic bombs and the barren plains of sand and pebbles. Upon reaching the Atbara River they witnessed the dramatic change of the riverbed from a dry expanse to a flowing torrent marking the onset of the rainy season in Abyssinia. This event provided Baker with insights into the Nile's sources as the Atbara's waters contributed significantly to the Nile's flow. The journey continued through the fertile lands of the Taka country where Baker observed the agricultural practices of the local tribes and the change of Egyptian rule on the region. The narrative also highlights the cultural aspects of the Arab tribes including their customs, attire, and social structures. Baker's interactions with the local sheiks, particularly the venerable sheik Achmet Abou Sinn, offer a glimpse into the hospitality and traditions of the desert people. Throughout the expedition, Baker's determination and resilience are evident as he navigates the challenges of the African wilderness driven by his quest to uncover the mysteries of the Nile.
